LIST OF # ENGLISH IRREGULAR VERBS.

---

The following list gives the principal parts — namely the infinitive, preterit, and past participle — of all English verbs of the Old (or strong) conjugation, along with those of the New (or weak) conjugation which are irregular otherwise than in spelling merely. Verbs, namely, of which the final alternates between y and ie, as

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| die | dying | died, |
| try | trying | tried, |

and those which double a final consonant, as

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| dot | dotted, | bed | bedded, |
| whip | whipped, | rub | rubbed, |
| stun | stunned, | beg | begged, |

are not included in the list.

Of the two or three verbs which have other irregularities than those shown in the principal parts, these irregularities are also given. Be is the only one having a present indicative different from the infinitive.

If not only the irregular form, but also one made after the ordinary model of the New conjugation, is in use, the irregular form is given in ordinary (not full-faced) type; thus, for example, bent, not bent, because bended is also correct. Antiquated or obsolete forms (as bare, chode) are put in parenthesis. But it is to be observed that occcasionally in English authors, especially of the olden time, and most of all in poetry, other irregularities than those here given may be met with: thus, an n or en of the participle is dropped, or a preterit is assimilated to the participle or vice versa, or a New form is used instead of an Old one.

Verbs which occur only in composition with a prefix (as abide, begin, forsake) are given with the prefix. But of verbs which are in the list as simple ones, the compounds (such as for-bear, be-hold, in-weave, mis-take, out-run, over-throw, un-bend, under-go, with-stand) are not given over again.
